What is Pleneurethics?

Pleneurethics is a scientific system of thought that places neurological sufficiency as the centerpiece of health and ethical conduct. The word "Pleneurethics" was created from a combination of three words:

- Plenary: meaning complete or whole
- Neural: relating to the science of the brain and its nervous system
- Ethic: developing strategies of effective and responsible behavior in Ethics

The goal of Pleneurethics is to improve the quality of lives through better management of neurological resources so as to create and sustain neurological sufficiency. Pleneurethics espouses a balanced view of the whole person through an understanding of the physical, chemical, mental, and cultural environments of the brain. The way the brain is affected by these environments and responds to them determines one's health, character, and ability to make responsible choices.
